Anne Scott James : Down to Earth (Bloomsbury Gardening Classics) before purchasing it in order to gage whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised Down to Earth (Bloomsbury Gardening Classics):

First published in 1971, this work provides a miscellany of ideas on many aspects of gardening - from designing and planting to paths and hedgerows, the winter garden and the wild garden, creating windbreaks and filling odd corners - as well as a host of suggestions for books to read and gardens to visit. An amateur gardener herself, Anne Scott-James writes of her own garden, created, she admits with too little time and money and virtually no professional help - full of shortcomings but nevertheless a constant source of pleasure. She also writes of a number of other gardens around

Britain, for it is from these gardens that she has collected practical and original hints and ideas from their owner-gardeners.
