I am getting really tired of nonfiction Books (said with the appropriate eye rolls and coughs into my hand) that aren't really books at all. They are simply a few sentences that are called Chapters which really have no useful information. Let's take this little ditty for example. Chapter 5 Choosing the Right Plants for your Farm. Uh, dude? Hybrid and cross-pollinated seeds are all you talk about?! What about Heirlooms THE way to go for backyard gardening! Look, you're looking to create up thousands of pounds of tomatoes that could be used for cannon balls like those you get in the store. If you are going to do that, just go to the market and buy a cannonball tomato and forget the love. However, if you want a tomato that tastes like a real tomato and not cardboard, heirloom is the way to go. Ad nauseum. and Food in Your Backyard Easily (Best Guide To Grow Organic Farming, Backyard Farming Strategies). Huh. Definitely not the best of anything here. I wouldn't waste time on this one, believe me. Even though this is a for beginners piece, it is basically useless. Give it a pass. There is better information, much better, at your local growers co-op. Or look up your local gardening clubs they are chock full of information and I bet you will find they are marvelous human beings! 0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Backyard farming 101 By Mikko J. We have a small garden in our backyard and are looking to add in some small-scale farming as well. This was a book we chose to test out, and we're really happy with it. It makes it easy for newbies like us to get going but has some more advanced content as well. 0 of 0 people found the following review helpful.
